Coronary Fatal To N. W. Munn

Ex-Joy Official Was
Pro Baseball Player

Norman W. Munn, 68, retired purchasing agent for the Joy Mfg. Co. and the former LaDel Conveyor and Mfg. Co. of this city and a former professional baseball player, died yesterday at 3 p. m. at Union hospital five hours after he was stricken with a coronary attack at his home.

Mr. Munn was taken ill suddenly at his home at Brightwood, RD 4, this city. A native of Joelton, Tenn., he had resided in this city and vicinity since 1923. He was a son of the late William and Sarah Carney Munn and was born Aug. 23, 1887.

When he came to this city he was employed as a shipping clerk by the Wise - McClung Mfg. Co., later joining the LaDel firm, which was later purchased by Joy. He was retired three years ago. He played baseball for the Macon, Ga., team of the Atlantic League and for the Lowell, Mass., team of the Eastern League.

While a member of the Lowell team, Mr. Munn was struck in the left eye by a baseball during batting practice and lost the sight of the eye. While employed by the Wise - McClung firm, he played with the American Sweeper semi-pro baseball club in this city.

Mr. Munn was married to Clara
