Ex-quarterback needs treatment, sex therapist testifies at hearing

RALEIGH (AP) — A Wisconsin sex therapist testified Tuesday that Percy Moorman, a former N.C. State University quarterback, needs treatment to prevent a repetition of sex offenses he committed last year.

During Moorman's trial in February, it was suggested that the Danville, Va., all-America prep quarterback might transfer to a California junior college. But Lloyd Sinclair, a sex therapist at the Midwest Center for Sex Therapy at Madison, Wis., said Moorman would be better off getting help.

"Mr. Moorman is a sex offender," Sinclair said during his testimony Tuesday at a sentencing hearing for Moorman in Wake County Superior Court. "Sending him to play football or incarceration without treatment, all of those would suggest that he doesn't have a problem."

"Playing football isn't considered psychological treatment with any validity," said Sinclair, a witness for Wake County Assistant District Attorney William Hart. "None of those things is going to help him learn to manage his stress."

Moorman — convicted Feb. 19 of second-degree rape, second-degree sexual assault and breaking and entering — could receive as much as 82 years in prison. During the early portion of the sentencing hearing, motions to dismiss the convictions were denied.

Hart has recommended that Moorman be sentenced to 26 years in prison.

The sentencing trial was recessed until 9 a.m. today.

Sinclair said Moorman is someone who loves and is attracted to women, but he added that Moorman "has come to distrust women."

Sinclair also quoted from the book, "Men Who Rape" by Dr. Nicolas Groth. In describing Moorman, Sinclair said Moorman fell into the category of "power rapist," a person who Groth says in his book has been pushed around and has a desire to release emotions.

"He appears to be a classic case of the power rapist," Sinclair said. "He is also denying the act itself and the effect of the act."

Sinclair said without treatment, "we have no reason to believe he won't do it again."

In cross-examination, attorney Roger W. Smith attempted to use the book to discount the claims that Moorman fit the mold of a power rapist. Sinclair agreed with many of the characteristics that might have demonstrated Moorman was not a typical rapist.

In earlier testimony, a psychologist working for the state said Moorman perceived women "in two extremes."

Wake Superior Court Judge James H. Pou Bailey had ordered that Moorman's sentencing be delayed from the date of conviction until a diagnostic study of sentencing options for his case could be performed by prison medical staff.

Patricia Van Buren, a psychologist for the state Department of Correction, told Smith that Moorman showed signs of a "Madonna versus seducer" complex during a series of psychological tests.

"There are women he cares about," Van Buren said. "On the other hand, he sees women as seducers. He felt uncomfortable with women his age at the university. He wasn't sure they liked him because of who he was or because of his celebrity status."

Van Buren described Moorman as a perfectionist and the type of person who disliked failure.

"One of his weak points is that he won't let himself be a human being," she said. "He wants to be perfect. He doesn't know how to say 'no' to people."

While Moorman possesses "good social judgment," Van Buren said Moorman "sometimes does not use the judgment well." She said the high school all-America has good intelligence and scored above high school level on achievement tests.

"From the results of test data, he has shown good judgment most of his life," he said.

At the start of the trial, Smith told Bailey that Moorman had no indication from the victim that the assault was against her will. He said Moorman heard no response from the victim.

"It would be our position that the evidence is insufficient," Smith said.

During the trial, it was revealed that Moorman entered the woman's room while she was asleep. When they woman awakened, she discovered Moorman was having sex with her.

"One theory would be, from the defendant's point of view, there was no incapacitation," Smith argued. "In his mind, there was a woman who did not offer resistance."

Smith also presented letters from friends of Moorman, which Bailey reviewed for about 10 minutes.

But Hart said Moorman used force and acted against the victim's will. He called Moorman's trial testimony "unpersuasive."

Bailey then denied the motions.

Several NCSU football players, as well as Wolfpack Coach Tom Reed, attended the sentencing hearing.
