West Frankfort city elections

Reform movement could be facing troubles

By Mike Qualls
Of The Southern Illinoisan
Tuesday may be a bleak day for West Frankfort's reform government movement.

With the city election less than a week away, observers say voter sentiment appears to be swinging away from the "Team Slate," described as the "second platoon" of the reform movement.

Voters will elect a mayor and four commissioners. The present Lawrence Finazzo administration is leaving office.

The "Team Slate," headed by mayoral candidate Daily J. McGlasson, is comprised of businessmen and has the solid backing of the outgoing administration.

Running with McGlasson are commissioner candidates Robert L. Brown, William Monti, Charles D. Lintner and Haskell C. Boaz.

Their opposition is mayoral candidate Mike McClatchy, and commissioner candidates Irvin Chance, Ralph Adkins, Joe H. McCann and Burl May.

The latter group of candidates are not officially running together. The McGlasson slate has labeled itself as a team since it filed for the Feb. 28 primary election.

In the primary, McClatchy polled almost twice as many votes as McGlasson, 1,838 to 980.

McGlasson's running mates did little better. Lintner and Boaz ran seventh and eighth with 958 and 948 votes respectively.

Monti was fifth with 1,022. Brown ran second with 1,402.

Chance Led
Chance led the commissioner field with 1,623. Adkins and McCann ran third and fourth with 1,059 and 1,031 votes respectively, and May was sixth with 968.

Campaign issues boiled down to two words — utility tax.

Candidates leave little doubt where they stand on the vital issue. McClatchy said, "We intend to eliminate the utility tax," and the McGlasson slate has pledged to follow in the footsteps of the present administration, which imposed the tax.

Another issue is city codes, also created by the Finazzo administration. Some West Frankfort residents indicate a resentment of the codes that set up standards for existing buildings and construction.

The Finazzo administration has pushed hard on codes enforcement, numerous buildings have been razed because they were substandard.

The McGlasson slate candidates have pledged to continue the present administration's government practices.

McClatchy would comment little on his stands on some issues. Outside of his blunt stand on the utility tax, he had little else to say except "I'm for a better police force," and "We will demand all city employees treat the public with courtesy."

He would not comment on what moves he would make to improve the police force. He also refused comment on the fate of present city department heads if he is elected.

Both Republican and Democratic precinct committeemen are supporting McClatchy, a Republican. McGlasson is a Democrat.

Franklin County Democratic Chairman Ben Cherry concedes he is aware his precinct workers are backing McClatchy, but said, "I don't get involved in city elections."

McGlasson charges political workers are against his ticket because they want to regain non-elective city jobs for patronage purposes.

In 1963 city voters backed the reform movement both in a legally contested recall election and a later general election that saw Finazzo elected mayor.

Chance, who led commissioner candidates in primary voting, was a long-time city water department worker, serving under both the Frank Russell Sr. and John Heaton administrations.

The Russell administration was ousted by the Finazzo group in 1963.

Heaton has had a stormy political career. One county political leader described his reign during the 1950's as a "terrible bad dream."

McCann, a retired mine executive, served briefly as commissioner in the Russell administration.

May also served previously as commissioner in the Russell administration.

Atkins was water superintendent under Heaton. He operates a business in Royalton along with Bert Melvin, one of the commissioners ousted in the recall election in 1963.

Chance and May presently work as coal miners.

Retired
McClatchy, 61, is a retired long-time assistant supervisor of state parks.

Team Slate members Boaz and Monti also are retired. Boaz retired in 1965 after 44 years with Coca-Cola Bottling Co. Monti retired in June after 43 years as a sales representative for United Biscuit Co.

Boaz served 15 years on the West Frankfort Grade School Board of Education before formation of the unit district.

Brown is associated with E. R. Brown Furniture Co. He has served as secretary of the community council, as a member of the plan commission seven years, and was chairman of the plan group the past three.

Lintner is co-owner and manager of Sandner Electric Co. McGlasson is a sales representative for Employers Insurance Co. He served eight years on the park board, the last four as president; one term as president of the Chamber of Commerce; and was a member of the plan commission.

McGlasson was active in the organization of the community council and presently serves as a trustee.

Teachers elect Sundermeyer

The Carbondale Education Association Tuesday elected William Sundermeyer, a sixth-grade teacher and coach at Bush Grade School, president for the next school year.

Sundermeyer was elected by four votes over Charles Horst, an eighth-grade teacher at Lincoln Junior High School.

Other officers elected are: vice president, Gaylin Fligor, sixth-grade teacher at Lakeland Grade School; secretary, Joan Holcomb, third-grade teacher at Springmore Grade School; and Susan Haske, vocal music teacher at Lincoln Junior School.

The new officers are to be installed at the May meeting of the CEA.

William Dunkel, an insurance agent, spoke on tax sheltered annuities for school teachers and administrators. The association consists of teachers and administrators in the Carbondale Grade School District. The association approved a report of its salary and welfare committee to request a $300 base salary raise for the school year, 1967-68. The request is to be made to the Carbondale Grade School District board April 20.

City fathers

agree minds would wander

The Carbondale City Council will not hold its informal meeting Monday.

The mayor and four council agreed their minds would not be on council business.

All five are running for reelection Tuesday in the city election.

The next scheduled meeting will be the regular formal meeting April 24 when the new council will be sworn in.
