

Clay Sheedy Dies At 65 in Boston

BOSTON (UPI) — Clayton Sheedy, a special assignment scout for the Boston Red Sox, was found dead in his room at the Madison Hotel Saturday.

Sheedy, about 65, lived in Groton, Mass., and often stayed at the hotel when his work required him to be here, team officials said.

Authorities said he died of natural causes.

Sheedy was an outstanding athlete for Georgetown University around World War I. After his college career, he played minor league baseball during the 1920's and 30s.

Although he never made the major leagues, he was the star first baseman for the old Baltimore Orioles.

Sheedy became an FBI agent after his playing career but returned to athletics as a coach at Georgetown in the early 1940s.

After managing in the Chicago Cubs farm system, he came to the Red Sox organization in 1948 as manager of the Boston affiliate at Marion, Va., in 1948, taking his scouting post in 1949.

Sheedy leaves a son. Funeral arrangements had not been completed.

Cabalantia Basaball

Clayton Sheedy

Clipped By:

timcopeland Thu, Nov 30, 2017

